BBCi Film wrote The script puts this clash between innocence and experience to good effect in the marvellous dialogue that constantly switches from naiveté to profanity and back again. But it's the beguiling performances from the three young children that are really captivating, and it's their sense of the comic and the tragic elements of their predicament that gives the film its enjoyable energy. A real treat. (Jamie Russell)

Le Figaro Magazine : (...) il (Nabil Ayouch) retrouve la vérité et l'émotion du grand cinéma européen, qui fait se confronter le réalisme du thème et des héros avec l'émerveillement d'un univers poétique du côté de Jean Vigo et de Vittorio de Sica. (Daniel Toscan du Plantier)

Ali Zaoua

Ali lives in the streets of Casablanca, where gangs of homeless boys are led by a cruel leader named Dibs. Ali wants to break away from the gang and is killed by one of Dib's boys. Ali's friends Kwita, Omar and Baubker decide to give him a decent funeral at sea (as becoming a sailor was Ali's big dream). In the process, they set up another challenge to the tyranny of Dibs. The film touches all ages with charming inserts of animation and exquisite cinematography.
